Circles is a movement to set up and train support groups of 4 to 5 volunteers to form a 'Circle of Support and Accountability' for a 'core member', usually a sex offender after release from prison.

It started in Canada in 1994 and two pilot projects have been run in Britain, largely through Quaker Peace and Social Witness, with Home Office backing. The Lucy Faithfull Foundation is also involved with Circle projects for men leaving residential sex offender treatment.

Under the new National Offender Management Service there are plans for regional funding including the Eastern region.
